Therapy Kingston - Dynamic Spinal Therapy was initially developed by Rolf Ott, in Switzerland in the 1980's. This particular technique of bodywork combines the use of energies and hands-on bodywork to address joint issues, realign the spine and resolve spine and posture problems. This gentle type of bodywork is suitable to cure several health concerns for a variety of individuals. It is always wise to discuss with a medical doctor previous to beginning whatever form of bodywork regime in order to make certain that there are no contraindications.

There are lots of concepts and practices involved with Dynamic Spinal Therapy. This therapy borrows from Conventional Chinese Medicine the concept of qi or life force. A huge focus of Dynamic Spinal Therapy is the promotion of a healthy and even flow of qi around the body. It even relies on traditional Western styles like Swedish massage to adjust the body in a physical way.

Usually, a Dynamic Spinal Therapy session lasts around 40 minutes. The session typically starts with an ear reflexology test. The points on the ear are tested and then the response is noted. The Dynamic Spinal Therapist then makes use of a particular stylus to be able to trace the meridians of the body, looking for blockages or spots of weaknesses while following the flow of qi.

Once the energy work session is finished, the therapist makes adjustments to the spine and to the pelvis, initially with the client face up and after that with the customer face down. The customer is encouraged to deeply relax as the muscles are stretched intensely. The session is finished with a gentle rocking which is supposed to encourage the release of tension, and promote relaxation while realigning the spinal column. There are various therapists who skip the energy portion of the session and concentrate on the bodywork instead.

As soon as the Dynamic Spinal Therapy session has ended, the client typically feels deeply relaxed. Because of vigorous stretching and the release of tension, posture is supposed to improve. At times conditions which lead to back pain and soreness might be alleviated at least partly. Theoretically, regular sessions could keep the customer's body and energy balanced, improving overall health and general well-being.
